SCOPE OF COURSE

Most of us cannot imagine a time when we are unable to speak for ourselves but it may happen. When a medical crisis happens, it may leave us too ill to make our own healthcare decisions and our loved ones may be placed under undue stress. Making our healthcare preferences known early is an important step towards guiding the healthcare team and our loved ones to make these decisions on our behalf, in our best interests, when the time comes. This process of communication is known as Advance Care Planning (ACP). Through these discussions, individuals can share their thoughts and preferences for future care with their loved ones and discuss their wishes with their healthcare provider.

If you would like to know how you can help your clients, family and friends embark on their ACP journey, then the ACP Advocacy Workshop is for you. In this half-day interactive workshop, participants will explore their own feelings about end of life care, learn to use the ACP workbook and guide others to use it, understand the framework for ACP and enhance their communications skills.
